Substantial differences are evident in the way the performance of these treatment systems are evaluated and presented. To investigate this thesis a study was performed in a drinking water distribution system

ACGIH 01

The dry sieving showed this fraction to be only around 13%. In two similar isolated network areas the effect of particles on discolouration risk was studied with particle counting, the Resuspension Potential Method RPM and assessment of the total accumulated sediment. The protocol developed is easy and quick to use.
