Few are willing to deny that we have a representation, not merely of spatial and of temporal objects, but also of space and time themselves, so there is a genuine puzzle lurking here. He discusses why we start our year on January 1st, how we measure time and why, how it relates to our solstice-vicinity winter festivals, and how we age.

The Philosophy of Space and Time (Introduction & Key concepts)

The Orthodox churches themselves, however, still cling to the Julian year, which is why the Orthodox Christmas falls on January 6 on our calendar. But the further contention that one cannot represent the absence of space may be more difficult for an empiricist to accept.

Of Time, Space, and Other Things
