} A pleasant feature of Dawlish, and one in which it resembles Bournemouth, is the open green space which lies between its two terraces and permanently secures its houses against over- crowding. Who was responsible for building churches on these hilltops and how is it that they are an integral part of the pyramidal shape that we have identified on the British landscape? It is of small stones, and now varies in breadth owing to the stones having been squeezed out of position by passing cart- traffic.
