What the Loss of a Child Does to Parents, Psychologically and Biologically

In a mindful way, you and your child release the balloon to honour their loved one.

What the Loss of a Child Does to Parents, Psychologically and Biologically

But while grief is universal, we all grieve differently.

Then, using statements made by parents whose children were murdered, it discusses the specifics of murdered-child grief including: the complex emotions felt by the grieving parents, how the necessity of interacting with the criminal justice system can alter and enhance these emotions, short- and long-term methods these parents employ to work through the grieving process and to reconstruct their shattered lives, and how anyone who comes in contact with the parents can help them survive their grief.
